(54) Itrac Hydro Electric Generator.

(73) Kingsley Mwneya.

(54)

(57) The iHEG is installed by cutting a section of the pipeline and inserting the turbine-generator unit. Water flow drives the turbine, which spins a rotor connected to generator. Electricity is regulated by a control unit and either stored in batteries or fed into the grid. The system's materials (corrosion-resistant alloys) ensure durability in high-pressure environments.

The invention comprises a compact hydroelectric generator unit to be installed within pipelines carrying pressurized water. The system integrates a turbine mechanism, energy conversion modules, and a control unit to efficiently convert kinetic energy from flowing water into electricity without disrupting pipeline operations. Itrac Hydro Electric Generator (iHEG) is an inline water electricity generation system designed to harness kinetic energy from pressurized flowing water within pipelines.

This innovation converts wasted hydraulic pressure in water distribution systems, water utility companies, mining operations, quarry, cement plants, agricultural irrigation, and industrial fluid networks into electricity, offering a sustainable solution to Zambia's energy challenges.
